

INCONSIDERATE Resentment

I am resentful at T.M. The cause of the resentment is that he shot and killed my sister.

Because I was inconsiderate, my self esteem was affected. I thought less of myself because I no longer had a sister, and because of the circumstances around her death.

Because I was inconsiderate, my personal relationships were affected. Every relationship I cared about was impacted by the shock of loss and the grieving process that followed.

Because I was inconsiderate, my material security instinct was affected. It was very difficult for me to focus on working for awhile, and my business was less profitable during that time.

Because I was inconsiderate, my emotional security instinct was affected. I was depending on my wife, parents, and brother for support and they were dependent on me.

Because I was inconsiderate, my security ambitions were affected. Before her death, I had big plans for growing my business which needed to be delayed.

Because I was inconsiderate, my sexual ambitions were affected. I was not interested in sex during the initial phases of anger and grief.

Inconsiderateness is at the heart of this resentment. I failed to consider all the factors that caused T.M. to take my sister's life. I was blind to the fact that he was a sick individual, and failed to consider that many of the things that likely caused him to snap were out of his control. Had I been more considerate, I would have found peace and forgiveness sooner, instead of harboring hate towards him for as long as I did.