

Selfish Resentment

I resent the IRS. The cause of this resentment is I think they stole $10,000 from me.

Because of my selfishness, my self-esteem was affected. I felt guilty for not reporting income.

Because of my selfishness, my personal relationships were affected. I still badmouth the IRS.

Because of my selfishness, my material instincts were affected. I have other financial responsibilities.

Because of my selfishness, my emotional instinct was affected. I felt very vulnerable because I believed they had all the power.

Because of my selfishness, my social ambitions are affected. I have to learn to live within my means.

Because of my selfishness, my security ambitions are affected. There is no free lunch, as I believe they can take it all. I have to learn how to survive on what I get paid after taxes.

I took Selfishness to an extreme. I sued the IRS, wanting a better result. Had I taken responsibility for my actions of past behavior and paid what I owed, I would not have given the IRS years of rent-free space in my head, paid lawyer fees or spent hours of research – all of which resulted in me paying more than I originally owed.

I live in man's world. I get to play by man's rules (IRS). Caesar (the government) gets his cut. God has allowed me to prosper.
